Member Sought for e-Health Advisory Committee

Information posted April 23, 2019

If you are interested in health information technology, health information exchange (HIE) systems, telemedicine, telehealth, and home telemonitoring services issues, you might want to apply to be a member of the e-Health Advisory Committee. The Texas Health and Human Services Commission executive commissioner is looking for a representative of a local or regional health information exchange. The individual selected will be appointed to the committee to serve a term expiring December 31, 2019. Applications are due by 11:59 p.m., May 2.

HHSC seeks applicants with HIE experience and the authority to represent a local or regional HIE. Although the preference is for a representative from an HIE such as an employee or board member, HHSC will consider an applicant who has adequate experience to represent an HIE perspective. If the applicant is representing a specific HIE, but is not employed by them, HHSC recommends obtaining a statement from such HIE, authorizing the applicant’s representation of the HIE on the e-Health Advisory Committee.

HHSC will consider the applicants' qualifications, background, and interest in serving on the committee and will try to choose committee members who represent the diversity of all Texans. For this reason, HHSC considers applicants' ethnicity, gender, and geographic location.
